RHS NOTICE ON REGISTRATION PUBLICATIONS AND GDPR

Change to the format of published entries in the Register & Checklist

Following the implementation of the European Union General Data Protection Regulation earlier this year, in order to comply we have had to make changes to the information we provide in the entries for cultivar and grex registrations.

For any cultivar or grex that is registered with the RHS as ICRA, from now on we will only publish the name of the registrant. The name of any other individual involved in the development of the cultivar or grex (originator, selector, raiser, introducer, the person who first flowered it, or named it) will be withheld if they are not the same as the registrant. As a result these roles will no longer be included in published registration entries.

We will continue to store this information if it is provided by the registrant but will not be able to supply that information in response to enquiries unless required for legal or compliance purposes.

New Group name

Phalaenopsis OX Golden Apple grex, Aureum Nubes Group. A group of seedlings developed by sib crossing from Phalaenopsis OX Golden Apple grex, producing peloric flowers in which the pink pattern of the lip is repeated on the other two enlarged petals. Plant with inflorescences bearing 8–12 blooms. Flowers 5.5–6cm wide, with sepals yellow and petals pink. Bred at Yantai Agricultural Science Research Institute of Shandong province, China.

What do you call a blue-flowered Phalaenopsis?

Although you might respond with a witty reply, this introductory question is not intended to introduce the punchline of a humorous quip. Just supposing a blue-flowered Phalaenopsis turns up at a show and is put up for an award. What would it be called? An Australian judging team potentially faced just this situation during a visit from Prof M Mii whose team produced the first blue-flowered Phalaenopsis when he brought along one of his pets (Chalmers 2018). Later the question was raised with the RHS Orchid Hybrid Registrar. The response might be of interest to a wider audience.

The production of live Phalaenopsis plants that produce blue flowers by their own phytochemical pathway, that is, without being injected with blue dye, has raised questions regarding an appropriate name. The fact that this plant has been produced by inserting a gene (known as F3'5'H) originally extracted from a plant of Commelina communis that enables synthesis of a blue anthocyanin has caused some to wonder if the resulting plant is an intergeneric hybrid or perhaps not even an orchid.

Firstly, it is only a single gene that has been introduced into the Phalaenopsis. This particular gene is expressed by causing a chemical modification to a natural pigment already produced by the orchid. The pink-coloured polyacylated cyanidin-based anthocyanins are modified chemically to produce a blue delphinidin-based anthocyanin. The new gene sequence provides the phytochemical pathway with the information needed to accomplish this. It does not modify any other aspect of the plant structure and function, hence the plant is still a Phalaenopsis orchid.

This same gene sequence has been successfully introduced into a Dahlia which resulted in the production of violet-flowered plants. By crossing these with other dahlias several blue-flowered seedlings were obtained. The same gene has been introduced into a lily and caused normally pink tepals to turn blue. The analogous Campanula version of the same gene (F'3'5'H) has also been used to produce purple lilies. The Viola F3'5'H gene from pansy plants has been introduced into chrysanthemums resulting in plants with purple ray florets. Further modifications of the biosynthetic pathway have resulted in blue-flowered chrysanthemums. Roses and carnations have also been similarly modified to produce blue flowers. However it has not yet been made to work in Petunia or cineraria (Pericallis x hybrida).

In each of the above examples the plants retain their generic and specific identity, the only change being in floral pigment chemistry. It is noteworthy that conventional hybridisation by cross pollination can also result in changes to biosynthetic pathways with the result that new chemical pigments unknown from either parent are produced in the hybrid, sometimes resulting in new colours.

There are other examples where single gene mutations can have drastic effects on appearance. There is a gene that can change the trumpet-shaped flower of a Brugmansia into a split corolla of five separate petals, at the same time reducing the broadly ovate leaves to narrow ribbons. So different was the appearance of this plant that it was originally described as not just a new species, but a new genus, Methysticodendron amesianum. Once it was realised this was a single gene transition a cultivar name sufficed to distinguish it, and it is now called Brugmansia x candida 'Culebra'.

The point of these examples is to show that the blue-flowered Phalaenopsis is still a Phalaenopsis orchid. In fact it is still part of the original grex used, Phalaenopsis Wedding Promenade grex. The only part of the name to change will be the cultivar or clonal epithet.

Blue-flowered Phalaenopsis have been produced by a team at Chiba University, Japan led by Prof. M Mii who has now retired. Due to the strict legislation and safety protocols surrounding the introduction of transgenic (genetically engineered) plants it will be at least another three years before these Phalaenopsis may be licenced for distribution. At this point they will be given a cultivar epithet, which is likely to be registered for Plant Breeder's Rights (PBR) or patented, or both. It is the statutory registration for patent or PBR that establishes the cultivar name, even if this epithet is only an unpronounceable alphanumeric code. If tests reach the point where a licence is granted it will be this cultivar name that is established and will have priority over any others, subject to legal jurisdiction.

I say "any others" because I have observed that cultivar epithets are the least understood and most abused element of cultivated orchid nomenclature. The reason being that most judging systems require that a cultivar epithet be provided for any plant put up for an award. The intention is to prevent confusion by making clear which clone is awarded. It is the clonal or cultivar name that then usually carries the award, rather than the grex or species. Consequently the chosen plant is often quite hastily given a cultivar epithet.

If the plant has been grown from seed by the exhibitor this is usually not a problem. But in the case of purchased plants it can be very difficult to determine if the plant is a clone or seedling. If it is a clone it may likely already have a cultivar name. If this name was given in another country how will the exhibitor know? Unless the label already makes this plain it is unlikely the exhibitor or even the judges will be able to discover it in time. In the resulting scenario the same clone gets several awards under different names. So if you ever obtain a blue-flowered Phalaenopsis please don't give it a name – it will already have at least one.

This is further complicated by the geographical limits of the statutory protection provided by PBR or plant patents. The registered cultivar name only applies in the geographical region covered by the legislation under which the protection is granted. Unlike grex registration with the RHS, which is international, each geopolitical region within which statutory protection is sought requires a separate registration and potentially could involve a new name. Consequently in cultivated plants it is not unusual for the same clone to have several different names, all of which are legally enforceable but only within the geopolitical area in which the legislation applies. In the case of the EU a single name applies throughout most of Europe. However after Brexit a plant registered for PBR in Holland may end up with a different statutory name in the UK.

One point out of this is that orchid clones with EU-granted PBR cannot be given a valid cultivar epithet for awards purposes in the UK. Any such name would be either a synonym or trade designation for the statutory name.

And you thought Latin names were difficult ...?

Cattleya purpurata* 'Werkhaeuseri'

The purchase of some live plants for the greenhouse display at Wisley prompted the usual investigation of correct names for display labels. Among the new arrivals were plants labelled Laelia purpurata var. werkhaeuseri. It was easy to establish that this is currently listed in WCSP under Cattleya, as Cattleya purpurata, although particularly in Brazil the names Hadrolaelia purpurata and Brasilaelia purpurata have their adherents.

Subsequent searches of nomenclatural databases failed to turn up any epithets at any rank spelled werkhaeuseri or variations thereof. This raised questions on the origin, validity and spelling of this name.

The late Carl Withner in his Cattleyas and their relatives, vol 2 The Laelias (p.111) does mention a "var. werkhaeuseri" when discussing the names applicable to blue-flowered variants of Cattleya purpurea. He also references an obscure work published in Brazil in Portuguese by Ferdinand J. Krackowizer, in 1950, Monographia da Laelia purpurata, suas variedades e seus hibridos. Most fortunately the RHS Lindley Library has a copy filed away. Pages 78–81 list and describe several different plants using the name Werkhaeuserii. A further reference to an earlier article is also provided in the journal Orquidea. This is a periodical once published in Brazil that has now ceased publication, and is not the same as the journal Orquidea currently published in Mexico. This time it was the library at Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew that provided a copy. There is no author cited, but the reference is, "Pequeno subsidio para a historia da purpurata Werkhaeuserii." Orquidea (Brazil) 12(3): 84–88 (May–June 1950).

It is interesting that both these Brazilian sources spell the epithet Werkhaeuserii which appears to be the original orthography that can be traced back to published correspondence in December 1908, and hence the spelling that should be adopted universally. It commemorates Sr. Carlos [Karl] Werkhaeuser born in Idar, Germany, 19 March 1859, who is credited with the discovery of the orchid that now bears his name. He died in Brazil, on 31 October 1914, and his son Oscar Werkhaeuser carried on a business in orchids, corresponding with Rudolf Schlechter among other well-known orchidologists.

The plant descriptions in both these Brazilian sources dating from 1950 are in Portuguese and there is no type specimen designated. Since a Latin diagnosis or description was required between 1 January 1935 and 31 December 2011 the names are unfortunately not valid botanically hence one cannot legitimately refer to var. werkhaeuserii (although type specimens did not become mandatory until 1 January 1958). It might be worth checking other floristic works on Brazilian orchids in case a validating publication exists for an infraspecific epithet for this plant.

The termination of this Latin form epithet -ii should be corrected to -i in accord with ICN Art. 60.8(a) since the name ends in -er. Hence 'Werkhaeuseri' is the corrected form of the cultivar epithet.

Under ICNCP Art. 21.6 botanically invalid published names can be adopted as cultivar, grex or Group epithets. Hence 'Werkhaeuseri' is valid as a cultivar epithet or even a Group name, since it seems qualifiers were added such as "Werkhaeuseri – superba" to distinguish between plants with differently marked flowers.
