Ten years ago, in March 2014, the first same-sex wedding was held in the UK. And though acceptance of the LGBTQ+ community is much improved, there is still a way to go.

Out of 195 countries in the world, same-sex couples can only marry in 35, while the death penalty for same-sex relations remains in 10.

Focussing on the positive legislation in the UK, my design celebrates how far gay rights have come over the past decade, but aims to inform a wider audience of how much more the LGBTQ+ community still needs support.

The focal point of the border is a moongate, which represents the wedding ring of commitment and a door to new beginnings. This structure will be surrounded by a rainbow of planting - divided into a hot border of reds and yellows and a cool border of blues and purples.

The plants chosen each represent a colour of the rainbow and the different shapes and forms mimic the diversity of the community.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD DESIGNER BIO

Design has always been a part of my life. Creative problem solving and finding practical, aesthetic solutions has always been at the centre of what I do.

I was a graphic designer for over a decade - making non-fiction books for children, in London. My love for the outdoors and relocating to Bath, has led me to a new career in garden design.

I believe it's important for everyone to enjoy spending more time outside. I specialise in making outdoor spaces for living, working, relaxing and learning. With focus on establishing the requirements of you and your family, I design thoughtful solutions which extend your home into the garden.
